FROM TAIWAN TO EASTER ISLAND - COLONISING THE PACIFIC

Who are the Polynesians and what are their antecedents? This course, delivered by workers active in the field, presents the evidence which links the Maori with an Austronesian-speaking people who departed Taiwan about BC 3000 and travelled via island southeast Asia and the northern coast of New Guinea to the westernmost islands of Remote Oceania. Here the Lapita culture, typified by the remains from the burial site at Teouma, Vanuatu, is well defined by BC 1300.

An ancestral Polynesian culture developed in Samoa and Tonga by BC 900. Several hundred years later eastward Polynesian dispersal restarted and by AD 900 reached Easter Island at the eastern extremity of Remote Oceania. By AD 1200 the settlement of Aotearoa by migrants with a tropical East Polynesian culture brought to an end 5000 years of epic voyaging, exploration and settlement.
