THE SHAPING OF MODERN OTAGO:

Experiences, challenges and problems of a migrant society, circa 1850-1950

The course explores the contribution to the life and development of Otago of some of the different groups who migrated here in the decades after the establishment of the Otago colony, and the problems they faced. The first two lectures look at the mid-late nineteenth century, discussing immigration patterns, and the society established in early Dunedin, while subsequent lectures look at various minority groups who have been particularly significant in Otago history. Resources used by the lecturers include central government records, the Caversham project organised by the University History department over many decades and the rich range of material at the Otago Settlers Museum.
